What factors influenced results

During the fund's fiscal year, the U.S. fixed income market had positive returns despite interest rate volatility. Treasury yields remained near decade highs amid growing federal budget deficits and shifting U.S. Federal Reserve expectations. Over the past year, U.S. Treasury yields were lowest around the first rate cut in September 2024, peaked in winter then remained in a narrow range amid inflation concerns and global trade uncertainty. The spread between 2- and 10-year Treasury yields gradually increased from nearly flat at the start of the period to 60 basis points positive. Nongovernment bonds delivered solid returns, supported by strong issuance and investor demand.

Within the fund, securitized bonds were particularly additive to relative results due to both a larger allocation than the benchmark and security selection. Duration positioning was also strongly positive for relative results, and U.S. Treasuries added as well.

On the other hand, curve positioning had a negative impact on relative results as the positive impact from curve positioning was not enough to offset the cost of maintaining the position. The fund held less investment-grade (BBB/Baa and above) corporate bonds than the benchmark, which had a negative impact on relative results given their strong returns.
