What factors influenced results

Global equities delivered robust gains amid moderating inflation and supportive monetary policies. All major regions posted strong returns, led by emerging markets. U.S. equities advanced on solid tech earnings and large-cap growth but slightly lagged its global peers. The Federal Reserve's October 2025 rate cut reinforced optimism, but fiscal concerns kept long-term yields elevated. Bond markets were volatile, with short-term yields falling due to policy easing and long-term yields rising on inflation and fiscal pressures.

Aside from the materials sector, all other sectors delivered positive returns for the fund with information technology, financials and industrials being particularly additive. U.S.-based companies, which represent over half of the portfolio, posted gains but lagged the fund's overall results. The fund's bond holdings also had positive returns, while helping support the fund's income objective and maintaining a measure of stability during periods of stock market volatility.

Conversely, the materials sector was a significant detractor from overall results. On a country basis, holdings in Denmark, India and Kazakhstan were among the most notable detractors from portfolio results.
