What factors influenced results

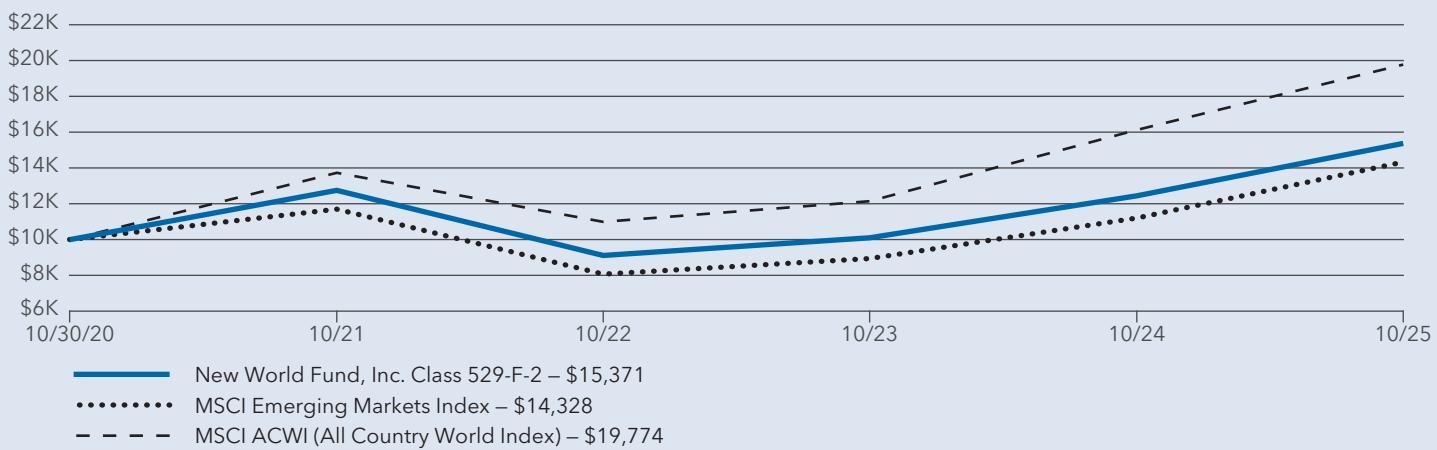

Global equity markets posted robust gains over the fiscal year, overcoming volatility from trade tensions and geopolitical uncertainty. All major regions delivered positive returns, with most non-U.S. markets outpacing U.S. equities throughout 2025. While U.S. equities benefited from strong tech earnings and large-cap growth, they slightly trailed the broader global rally. Within emerging markets, equities in China, Taiwan and Korea rallied sharply, more than offsetting the modest decline in India.

Most sectors delivered positive returns for the fund, with information technology, financials, industrials and communication services contributing significantly. Returns from the consumer discretionary and materials sectors were also positive, though below the portfolio's overall returns. Geographically, shares of companies based in the U.S., China, Korea and Taiwan made meaningful contributions to investment results.

Conversely, holdings in the health care sector weighed slightly on overall results. Returns from the energy and real estate sectors were the smallest positive contributors over the period. On a country basis, investments in Denmark, Indonesia and Luxembourg were among the most notable detractors from portfolio results.
