What factors influenced results

Global equity markets posted robust returns over the fiscal year, buoyed by a weaker dollar and strong earnings in key regions. U.S. equities delivered considerable gains, rebounding from early 2025 volatility and propelling the S&P 500 Index to all-time highs.

Developed markets in Europe and Japan benefited from accommodative policy shifts and fiscal stimulus measures. Within emerging markets, equities in China, Taiwan and South Korea rallied sharply, more than offsetting the modest decline in India.

Domestic equities fueled much of the fund's returns during the fiscal year, with growth-oriented equities and dividend-paying equities both contributing to overall results. Equities domiciled overseas outpaced U.S. stocks but remained a relatively smaller portion of the portfolio.

Within fixed income, high-yield bonds and emerging markets debt delivered the highest absolute returns. Other bond holdings posted more muted results, though the income and stability provided by bonds helped dampen the portfolio's volatility.
