Management's discussion of fund performance

The fund's Class 4 shares gained 15.62% for the year ended December 31, 2025. That result compares with a 15.13% gain for the S&P Target Date 2030 Index. For information on returns for additional periods, including the fund lifetime, please refer to capitalgroup.com/AFIS-returns-4.

What factors influenced results

U.S. equity markets delivered solid returns in 2025, fueled by investor enthusiasm for artificial intelligence (AI), and strong corporate earnings. Double-digit gains for global stocks outpaced U.S. returns. U.S. bond markets also produced positive results in 2025 as the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) cut rates three times and inflation remained moderate.

The fund's equity portfolio saw positive absolute returns over the year. U.S. stocks, which account for most of the fund's equity holdings, contributed meaningfully to absolute returns, owing in part to gains from information technology sector exposure as AI stocks outpaced the broader market. The fixed income portfolio also gained over the year and helped to fulfill its roles seeking capital preservation and income generation. Exposures to securitized and corporate debt were additive to the portfolio.

The fund's exposure to non-U.S. stocks contributed on an absolute basis, however its lower exposure relative to domestic stocks limited return potential as eurozone, U.K. and emerging markets stocks outpaced the U.S. market. Materials sector holdings detracted as returns declined. Within fixed income, the fund's U.S. Treasuries holdings lagged broader market returns, but were helped by strong security selection in curve positioning.
