Management's discussion of fund performance

The fund's Class 3 shares gained 24.32% for the year ended December 31, 2024. That result compares with a 25.02% gain for the S&P 500 Index.

What factors influenced results

During the fund's fiscal year, U.S. economic growth remained solid, driven by strong consumer spending despite uncertainties of the presidential election, high interest rates and a slowing labor market. Inflation declined but stayed above the U.S. Federal Reserve's (Fed's) target. Government spending grew rapidly, partly due to federal grants. U.S. exports remained flat over the past year, while imports increased. Communication services and information technology were the top-returning sectors.

Within the fund, most sectors added positive returns to the portfolio, with communication services, information technology and consumer discretionary holdings particularly additive. Financials and utilities companies also saw returns surpassing those of the overall portfolio.

Conversely, holdings in materials posted negative overall returns. Holdings in health care and real estate shares, while still positive, contributed less than the broader portfolio's overall return.
